You can download this version from the official Microsoft website . Now you can go directly to the configuration of the program. First, you need to select the device from which we will capture sounds. In principle this can be any sound-reproducing device. To test the sound in real time we can use a web camera. This allows us to evaluate the quality of the playback. Unfortunately the sound cannot be played back on the web page because the webcam runs using drivers and has to be running to play back the sound. Therefore, we can of course use the webcam to evaluate the sound in real time, but in order to run the webcam we need the computer and it has to be running. This means that we have to run the computer to test the sound. Unfortunately, Windows doesn't have a built-in feature that allows us to do that. In fact, we can't even use the webcam to test sound through the browser. You get an error message saying that the webcam is busy and the webcam is not working. The only way to fix this is either to close all open programs that are currently in use (such as the web browser), or to use some other method, such as with an app. Some common way to fix the problem when the webcam doesn't work on a Windows XP computer Alternatively, if you're using a Windows XP computer and the webcam isn't working, try starting your computer in safe mode. In Windows XP, safe boot mode is a limited-function mode that prevents all the data you store on your computer from being corrupted when you boot and reboot your system. You can learn about safe mode here.
