The new Android update brings most of the elements of the revamped Chrome Web Store to Android, with Google’s mobile web storefronts. The biggest new feature in the new Android storefront is the introduction of a photo album with every device — which is essentially a file browsing section of your photos, organized by month and device. I’m personally a big fan of this feature: I’m particularly fond of showing off my friend’s home photo albums, as they’re invariably full of truly impressive images, rarely the bland, boring shots you see when you browse people’s photo albums on social networks. More importantly, the photo album will be available with every device — even if it’s technically not your own. I’m reminded
