WikidPad PortableGov. John Kasich began his adult life in Massachusetts, the state in which he was born. But now his journey takes him home to Cincinnati, Ohio. Kasich, who represented a Cincinnati congressional district from 1980 to 1995, will be running for the Republican nomination to take on Democratic incumbent Gov. Ted Strickland next year. Strickland is in his second term. Kasich, who was elected to Congress by winning the GOP primary in 1988 and the general election in the district after beating the Democratic nominee in the 1988 presidential election, said he has a perfect right to his allegiance to his hometown. "Where else but home?" Kasich said. "I've lived my entire life in Ohio. I think that I have more of an obligation to be involved in Cincinnati and the state of Ohio because the people in the area know who I am. They know what my work has been." Kasich, 63, said he doesn't really take a back seat in his decision to run. He has a busy gubernatorial agenda of promoting a plan to tackle Ohio's budget deficit and fighting for education. "I'm not looking to be seen in Cincinnati," he said. "I think it's important to do it from the standpoint I'll be talking to the people
