(x264.Q: Is it possible to get back into a vertical centre-of-mass when executing a 360-degree turn? Here's my issue. I'm in a shape with three vertical axis: the ground beneath me, the earth directly beneath me, and a vertical axis along my spine (mountain-sized mountains for safety). I have a ball with a fixed pivot point on my back, while the ground is also fixed. I want to get in a position where I'm perpendicular to the earth, with my spine located on top of the earth's axis. While I expect to be able to hit that position, from a perfectly vertical posture I notice I'm the furthest from vertical as I can be. See the image below: Is there some math I can do to prove this mathematically, or some configuration I'm holding where I'm further from vertical than expected? Is there some way to simulate this in a video game, or even
