I wrote my first java program today. I used a data structure called Abstract Collection (AC) to keep track of simple records. My program simply takes a collection of objects and adds them to the AC. Before adding the records to the AC I'm using a "checked" method with the proper type of parameters to ensure that the user's input is valid. A Record is a Serializable object with hashCode and Equals methods. In other words, I'm using type checks to ensure that the objects that are being stored in the AC are "Checked".

```
public class AC implements Serializable{ public class Record implements Serializable{ String acKey;
String val;
//public Record(String ac, String v) { // acKey = ac; // val = v; //}
public Record(String ac, String v)
{
```

- New audio engine
